Dear Committee Clerk DiMezza,

Rent control should not be passed in RI because it would reduce the supply of rental housing, and lead to deteriorating property conditions. Studies show that rent control restricts the income and adds to the losses of landlords, which causes landlords to convert rental units into condos, shrinking the rental housing supply. When rent-controlled apartments remain occupied by long-term tenants even when their housing needs change, it leads to worsening shortages of housing.

Rhode Island should not pass rent control because it would reduce the supply of rental housing, discourage new construction, and lead to deteriorating property conditions. Studies from San Francisco (Diamond et al., 2019) and Cambridge, MA (Autor et al., 2014) show that rent control causes landlords to convert rental units into condos, shrinking the housing supply and making rents higher for new tenants. In New York City, rent-controlled apartments remain occupied by long-term tenants, even when their housing needs change, leading to inefficient use of space and worsening shortages. Sweden's rent control system has resulted in decades-long waiting lists for apartments, proving that strict price caps do not guarantee availability. A 2012 survey of economists by the University of Chicago found that 93% agreed rent control reduces housing supply and quality. Instead of rent control, Rhode Island should focus on zoning reform, tax incentives for affordable housing development, and tenant assistance programs to improve affordability without driving landlords out of the rental market.

Sincerely,

Della Reams
